reliable physicians, says: "All who have used it praise its standard virtues, and the well-known character of the house which makes it is a sufficient guarantee of its being all that is claimed, for they are men who could not be in-duced to offer anything else but a reliable medicine for public use."

Through the Suez Canal.

After coaling at Malta we steamed down the Mediterranean over the smoothest sea and beneath the bluest sky it ever was my happy portion to see. It was about 5 o'clock one morning when we first saw the light-house at Port Said and about 8 we entered between the two piers which guard the entrance to the canal and stretch far out into the Mediterranean. Passing a Turkish frigate and a French ram, we slowly steamed close to the left-hand shore and made fast to a buoy. No sooner were we fast than the Arabs swarmed on board, and soon coal was coming over the sides and into the dunkers at a rapid rate from barges along-side. On the left hand for a long distance stretched coal sheds; for this is the great coaling port of steamers bound eastward, there being quite a difference in the price here and at the other end of the canal. On the right was the town of Port Said, while in front lost far in the desert, appeared the canal, the grandest engineering feat of the age. Just fancy the amount of labor, when it was necessary to carry the sand a mile off into the desert, and at the same time prevent the surrounding sand from drifting and rolling into its place. Just take a handful of sand out from a pile and see how quickly the hollow is filled up and you can then form some idea of the undertaking. I was told out there that the English abandomed the work through inability to obtain labour at any price and bility to obtain laborers at any price, and that the French only succeeded by convict labor; that the soldiers stood guard and a refusal to work was instantly followed by a shot and that every foot of the canal is a monument to some poor devil, sent in short order to the Arabian paradise. However this was, the canal was finished and is today the only route for steamers to the East. About I o'clock the pilot came on board, and in a few minutes we left our moorings and steamed into the canal. The channel has about twenty-six feet of water in it and which is only kept at that depth by constant work at the dredges and by "AMERICUS" AMMONIATED SUPER PHOS- strengthening the sides by sinking rock and walling up the sides where they are the most threatening. On both sides the embankments rise up to a height of ten or fifteen feet and are composed of dull brown sands, which stretch away on both sides as from the burning sands till the eyes ache and the heart sickens at the dismal scene. With what a relief we turn to the canal stretching like a blue sparkling ribbon and feast our eyes at the sight of a station looming up a half mile ahead with its little cottage, its shrubbery and trees planted right in the midst of a desert and drawing life from a soil which has been brought a hundred miles to make life endurable to the station master, banished away out here, hundreds of miles from his own fair France, for who else but a Frenchman would ever think of bringing his garden with him, with its flowers and trees out here in this wilderness of sand? We tied up for a few second to let one of the large P. and O. steamers pass us; for every vessel must give way to the "Royal 'except men-of-war, which have the right of way everywhere. The canal is not wide enough for vessels to pass each other, so every quarter of a mile or so there is a wide place for tying up, and the vessel reaching there first makes fast to the bank and allows the other one to pass, except in the case of a vessel carrying the mail or a manof-war, both of which go right on through without stopping, except during the night. On the right hand side runs a track, and I was startled by the familiar sound of the engine whistle, and the next minute a train swept on by at the rate of forty miles an hour, while overhead.

"Like strings of ghosts The telegraph posts Came quickly trooping by." I noticed on the other bank a veritable caravan, such as one reads about and sees so much in pictures of the great deserthorses and camels and the old man all wrapped up in his white clothes, with the same long rifle with its crooked stock, which I have seen duplicated on canvas till I felt an inclination to extend a hand and say, "How are yeu, old boy," for-old acquaintance sake. And then I thought what a difference between the two banks. Here the railroad, the telegraph-and there the old Arab traveling as his father and his grand father and his great-grandfather did a hundred years ago; a century separated by this narrow stream.

At dusk we tied up, having made about thin miles, as we were only allowed to go "stow" through the canal for fear of injuring the banks. The next morning found us on our way, and soon we were threading the crooked channel through the lake, with the town of Ismailia broad off the port beam. After about two hours' steaming at full speed we again slowed down and entered the other part of the canal, and again passed through between the same broad banks with disgust, and only enlivened by the stations, with their few feet of surrounding verdure, and occasional steamers bound to the westward—too few and far between which we passed or which passed us, until we finally steamed into the Gulf o. Suczabout 5 in the afternoon.

Off on our left gleamed the houses of Suez, and here we left our French pilot and took up a native Red Sea pilot, black as coal and mute as one of the
